HOMILY
PALM SUNDAY

It is simultaneously a time of light and a time of darkness. The time of light because the sacrament of the Body and Blood was established. Just as death came through a man, so the resurrection of the dead comes also through a man. The world was saved through him. This is the light of the Last Supper.

Conversely, darkness emanates from Judas. No one has penetrated his secret. He was seen as a neighborhood merchant with a small shop, unable to bear the weight of his calling. He could embody the drama of human insignificance. Or, alternatively, that of a cold and cunning gambler with grand political ambitions. However, none of these portrayals matches the Judas of the Gospels. He was a good man, like many others. He was called like the others. He did not understand what was being done to him, but did the others understand? He was foretold by the prophets, and what was supposed to happen, happened. Judas had to come, otherwise, how would the Scriptures have been fulfilled? But was his mother meant to nurse him so it could be said of him: "It would have been better for that man if he had not been born!"?

Peter denied three times, and Judas threw his silver coins, screaming his remorse for betraying a Righteous One. Why did despair overcome repentance? Judas betrayed, while Peter, who denied Christ, became the foundation of the Church. For Judas, only the noose remained. Why did no one care about Judas's repentance? Jesus called him "friend." Is it truly just to think that this was a sad stroke of style, so that against the bright background, the black would appear even blacker, and the betrayal even more repugnant? However, if this hypothesis borders on sacrilege, then what does it imply about him being called "friend"? The bitterness of a betrayed person? Yet, if Judas had to exist for the Scriptures to be fulfilled, what guilt does a man bear for being condemned as the son of perdition?

We will never fully unravel the mystery of Judas, nor the mystery of remorse that on its own can change nothing.
